

Project Green Challenge : Part 2

Summary

Myah Brody, Freshman, Champlain College, Burlington, VT

My project was based on the idea of adding biodiversity around my college campus through native bees. I originally set out to create bee hotels, spread information about native bees, and create an art competition meant to represent and support bees.

In the end, this was slightly changed. Bee hotels were not possible this year, so I have been working with the Environmental Club at my campus to add them on the timeline for next year. Instead of an art competition, we held a bee Craft & Learn event, meant to inspire students, learn more about bees, and clear up any misconceptions they might have had. Finally, to spread information I have been working on a document compiling information about bees, everything from individual impact, reasons for decline, and explanation of species, to help inform people. After being finished it will be reviewed by teachers and students, and then posted publicly online, with the hope that any one who wants to make a difference has easy access to the information they need.