Reflection

Project Green Challenge has been an amazing experience that has completely impacted and improved my knowledge on the environment. From food waste, water usage, to climate justice, the whole experience has been absolutely amazing, and it has allowed me to grow as an environmental activist and find the topics I am truly passionate about in this field. A specific moment where I felt like an eco hero was when I was holding a sign in a nearby park for the Day 10 greener challenge. I was holding a sign in the support of trees and to protest deforestation, and this act made me feel empowered because I was standing up for something I believed in for environmental justice. This moment played out in a way that was satisfactory for me as well because people around me looked at the sign with interest, and the simple act of advocating for the protection of trees gained some people's curiosity and allowed me to express my opinion on this matter.

I will champion the reduction of carbon emissions, and I will advocate for the use of cleaner forms of energy such as renewable energy. To help heal our planet, I will reduce my carbon footprint by cutting down my water and electricity usage, planting trees, composting, and taking public transportation. I will fervently advocate for climate justice, and I will help strike to fight climate change. In addition, I am willing to protest policies and legislations that go against social and environmental justice. From making these changes and going greener, I ultimately hope to help heal the planet and encourage everyone to take small steps towards the greater goal of eliminating climate change, slowing the rate rising temperatures, and hindering species extinction.
