I have been looking for a bed side table with some character and I have been hoping to find one that is sourced second hand so that I can be more sustainable. I found this beautiful table on goodwill's online store. This is sustainable because it is purchased second hand which prevents it from going to the landfill.

I have a space above my bed that I was looking for a painting that isn't so common and depicts something beautiful. I thought that this painting was one of a kind and had the most beautiful image. It is on goodwill's online store. This is sustainable because chances are multiple people had it before it was being sold at this thrift store and reselling this sort of item prevents it from being trashed.

Facebook Marketplace

I found this awesome lamp from Facebook Marketplace for either my room or my living room. It is so cool with three legs and the design is beautiful. This is being resold so it is more sustainable than buying a wooden lamp from a first source company, where trees would have to be cut down to get the product. Now less trees have to be used because nothing new is being made for me to get this product.

This pillow is just what I was looking for for my bedroom. I love the color and size. It is being resold from facebook marketplace, so there are no new materials. Plus, the seller lives near me so the emissions of delivery or pick up will be decreased as well.

Facebook Marketplace

When I was searching for a decorative chair for my bedroom, I came across this detailed one on facebook marketplace. I actually wanted this exact chair from Urban Outfitters but decided against it because it wasn't sustainable. Now, I can get this chair in used condition so that I can buy secondhand and get a chair I love at the same time.

cami_pgc I thought I'd share some of the amazing second hand furniture items I found today! You don't have to give up beautiful furniture or art to live more sustainably! There are so many great alternatives to regular furniture stores:)
