Plant-holder: I think is a great addition for any house to have plants and a green space even if is not in a garden. It seems to be a second-hand piece of furniture.

DIY painting: With my sister's help, we did a pretty painting of a tree on a sunset that could be a really great home decor. We used paints we already had due to school projects we had done on the past.

DIY flower-holder: I used the flowers as decor alongside this flower holder I made of an old milk bottle that I painted with old white paint, and I put some cord around it.

DIY bottle decor: I used some bottles I had at home and cut plastic straws as well as some bags to fill the bottles with. They were of different colors as to make a pretty look when together.

Pillow: I went to a thrift store to buy this pillow, I didn't find one with my name, but I liked this one! The name of the store is Almacenes Génesis.

Most of the DIY decor was made with stuff I already had at my house. By doing this, I was able to give them a second life. At the same time both the furniture and the pillow are preloved stuff that have find a second life by being sold rather than thrown away.

Collage and caption:

Going for sustainable home items it's a great step towards an eco-friendlier lifestyle. Think about the amount of good furniture or decor that gets thrown away when it could function for many years to come. It is extremely fine to want or need a new look in our home. But we always have to find ways in which we could reduce our impact in the environment. By reusing what you have to make creative decor or by buying secondhand furniture, you are reducing the number of good materials that would usually end up in the trash. Let's be conscious in every step we make!
