Food Waste

GREENEST - 60 POINTS

- Is food insecurity on campuses an issue that you are aware of at your school?

Yes it is an issue in our school because students have different schedules and because they have other activities after class, like extra classes or sports they don't take the time to take care of their health.

Another simple reason is because they don't know how to organize their time.

- How does food insecurity interact with identities such as race, gender, sexual orientation, and socioeconomic status? What does this reveal about the intersection between food and justice?

In general, it does affect someones in food insecurity most of the times because of their socioeconomic status and race, because of the existed discrimination in the world, it can affect their lifestyle and their quality because they have less opportunities and financial resources.

- Research an organization on your campus or in the community that is working to address food justice / insecurity. Tell us about this organization and how it supports students. What can you do as an individual to support that work? If there is no group at your school actively working to provide food access, try to find one at another school/university.

We have a group in our school Anahuac Mayab a group that helps foreigner to install in Merida and gives tips and methods for them to adapt in their new place also the are school classes, events and workshops that talk about personal finances, maybe is not something direct about food insecurity but it does talk about other topics that would help you with that issue.

- What are some viable solutions that address the issue with success?
- Reduce food waste
- Reduce the Risk of Commercializing
- Improve Existing Infrastructural Programs
- Work Towards Defeating Climate Change
- Improve Trade Policies
- How can you apply and implement these solutions at your school?

First with the solutions that are in our power as students like food waste, learning to do it, implementing them in our lives and teaching others how to do it. We believe that a big group of students with the same ideology and wanting to fight would show our leaders to take action within what they can and should do, like improve trade policies and infrastructural programs.
