- My favorite message is the message posted by @Browngirloutdoorworld, on June 21, 2023, in connection with National Indigenous people day.
- The fact that this message was posted in connection with Indigenous people day has inspired me the most. I also immediately thought of the Indigenous community in my country. The Indigenous community has been experiencing problems in habitats for years. Because they cannot enjoy nature inland. Their habitats are increasingly threatened by mining activities carried out by the government and MNO. Fortunately, there are a few organizations in our country that stand up for Indigenous people's rights. To know today that there are even more organizations like @browngirloutdoorworld out there, standing up for Indigenous people, is absolutely amazing. This gives hope and that is why I have hope. There are people who think about our nature, climate and fellow man, the future, justice. It has inspired me to develop myself so that I can guide others. I want to be an alarm, an alarm for justice, climate and people.

It is a given. Nature has no color, no race or culture! let us contemplate the splendor of nature with love and peace. No matter who you are where you're from , BIPOC, LGBTQ, White, poor or rich, nature is for all of us and we should enjoy and protect it. @turninggreenorg @browngirloutdoorworld #PGC2023".
