Mia Amor Mottley, SC, MP (born 1 October 1965) is a Barbadian politician and attorney who has served as the eighth prime minister of Barbados since 2018 and as Leader of the Barbados Labour Party (BLP) since 2008.

"Our world knows not what it is gambling with, and if we don't control this fire, it will burn us all down," she said in September. Drawing on the lyrics of reggae great Bob Marley, she added: "Who will get up and stand up for the rights of our people?"

"The impassioned speech would grab headlines around the world and for many, it was an introduction to Mottley. But the Barbados Prime Minister, this year's Champion of the Earth for Policy Leadership, has spent years campaigning against pollution, climate change and deforestation, turning Barbados into a frontrunner in the global environmental movement. The Barbados Prime Minister, this year's Champion of the Earth for Policy Leadership, has spent years campaigning against pollution, climate change and deforestation, turning Barbados into a frontrunner in the global environmental movement. Poorer nations want more money because they did little to cause climate change but face its worst effects.

They also struggle to afford expensive projects like renewable energy.

She describes the threat of climate change as "a death sentence" on the world. "If it is a death sentence, then we need to move with urgency.

"Mia Mottley's dedicated fight against climate change demonstrates strong leadership and a commitment to addressing one of the most pressing global challenges. Her initiatives and advocacy efforts underscore the importance of international cooperation and policy action to combat the environmental crisis. Mottley's contributions serve as a significant step towards a more sustainable and climate-resilient world.
