For the Greenest project about our waste, I was inspired by Hannah Tizedes. She uses her art to educate people about the pollution we can generate and utilizes colorful waste to make it more fun. I also wanted to do the same, but in a different way; I decided to create a puppet using colorful objects that I no longer used and were destined for the trash, like a hotel, cardboard, papers and toys. This puppet is named "Ayllu," and its goal is to educate people on the proper handling and disposal of our waste. Today, "Ayllu" started by verifying the correct use of plastic bags for household garbage.

With "Ayllu," we want people to learn to care for the environment in a didactic and creative way.
